Why is drawing important and how can it support children's learning?

Drawing helps people to understand, think, and communicate, to be creative and to do things. A picture can communicate an idea more effectively than words. Being able to express yourself through creating a drawing is a transferable skill, which can be used as a tool for teaching and learning across the curriculum. It can help children access their creativity, develop their imagination and enable them to express themselves.

This practical half day training session will include:

- An exploration of skills progression in drawing and how this can be mapped across all year groups within a primary school
- A range of practical ideas and activities that can easily be replicated in the classroom
- Suggestions to simplify and support the planning process
- Sharing assessment criteria for assessing children's drawing
- Identifying how and when drawing can be used as a tool for learning across other subject areas

This is a practical session, so please attend wearing suitable clothing.
